A dating relationship between a professor and a student enrolled in his/her class or an advisor and an advisee is generally prohibited. Dating relationships between faculty and students not currently enrolled in their classes or between supervisors and subordinates or student workers are generally deemed unwise. Such consensual relationships may create an environment in which power differences may be unfairly exploited, the respect and trust given someone in authority may be violated, and pressure may be subtly or inadvertently exerted on those in a vulnerable position.